PEACE AND CONFLICT STUDIES CONCENTRATION

The Peace and Conflict Studies concentration is a multidisciplinary program for students who wish to complement their major field of study with courses focused on the causes of domestic and international conflict as well as the ways of preventing conflict and fostering peace. By thinking through the historical, political, social, and structural factors that lead to inequality and conflict, as well as the means and possibilities for resolution and peace, students develop the knowledge and skills necessary for responsible citizenship.

Requirements

To complete the concentration, a total of six courses is necessary from the lists below, representing at least three disciplines. Students can choose between two concentration tracks: Peace and Conflict Studies or Peace and Conflict Studies/Social Justice. See the Peace and Conflict Studies website for more details about the guidelines for the concentration.

Students must take at least one course in each of three categories listed below. No more than two courses from your other plan(s) of study may be counted toward your concentration. No more than two Study Abroad courses, with the director's permission, can be counted for concentration credit.
