

CRITICAL RACE & ETHNIC STUDIES (CRES)

CRES 299-F01 — Indigenous Speculative Fiction Course count: 1

This course focuses on Indigenous speculative fiction from North America. We will read novels by Native American writers to explore their perspectives on apocalypse, monstrosity, horror, myth, ceremony, and survival. What does apocalyptic fiction look like for a community that has been living in a post-apocalyptic world since the arrival of Europeans? How do distinct cultural figures impact horror and fantasy fiction written by Indigenous novelists? And how can a young adult novel teach its readers about Native American history and life? These are just some of the questions we will explore together this semester

GPA units: 1

Common Area: Cross-Cultural Studies, Literature

CRES 299-F02 — Racial Justice, Media Literacy, and Digital Writing in the United States Course count: 1

This intermediate, Frameworks course draws together modes of multimodal composition online and analysis of the role of race and the rhetorics of anti-racism in online media, social media, and digital storytelling (including podcast and video), among other forms. With a focus on corporate and citizen journalism, students write two short analysis papers on the role of race in online news coverage, produce a multimodal project that contributes to fairer more balanced coverage of an issue related to race in society, and create a plan of action for future online engagement.

GPA units: 1

CRES 310 — Abolition Rhetoric Course count: 1

This course focuses on the rhetoric and practice of abolition. First, we will look at tactics in speech, writing, and direct action taken up by nineteenth-century abolitionists John Brown, Sarah and Angelina Grimké, Frederick Douglass, Sojourner Truth, William Lloyd Garrison, and Harriet Tubman. Then, we will explore contemporary activists use of abolitionist frameworks to advance the cause of racial justice in work by Michelle Alexander, Ruth Wilson Gilmore, Adrienne Marie Brown, Angela Davis, and Alex Vitale. It fulfills Group B and Group D requirements for the English major. Also counts toward Africana Studies. It does NOT fulfill the literature common area requirement.

GPA units: 1

Typically Offered: Annually

CRES 311 — Native American Rhetoric Course count: 1

This semester, we will consider how Indigenous nations in the Americas create, share, and preserve their stories. We will approach Native American texts through a rhetorical lens, considering the media through which Native American peoples make meaning, and how expressive forms sustain indigenous cultures, relations, and histories despite the ongoing colonization of the American continent. This course takes a hemispheric approach, meaning we will learn about Indigenous texts from North, Central, and South America. By the time you leave CRES 311, you will have engaged with a broad spectrum of indigenous media, from the Cherokee syllabary to Incan Khipus. You will also learn key terms in Native American/Indigenous Studies that will deepen your understanding of your own relations with settler colonialism and Indigenous worldviews and cosmologies.

GPA units: 1

Common Area: Cross-Cultural Studies

CRES 374 — Toni Morrison Course count: 1

This course examines the trajectories of Toni Morrison's literary career, including books from her early, middle and late stages, as well as some of her own literary and cultural criticism. This course is an opportunity to engage in depth with a single author and to gain a deeper understanding of Morrison's style, form, and representations of American communities and histories.

GPA units: 1

Common Area: Cross-Cultural Studies, Literature

Typically Offered: Alternate Years

Code	Title
CRES 310	Abolition Rhetoric
CRES 311	Native American Rhetoric
CRES 374	Toni Morrison